Museum News

Jamesville Community Museum November 2018

From the President:

Museum News

Your museum officers and trustees, once again, owe a huge THANK YOU to the Jamesville Fire Commissioners, Fire Department Members, and Fire Department Attorney, Peter Badera. During the month of September, the Fire District granted the museum an easement on property, west of the museum, sufficient in width to allow the museum to construct a driveway. This change was the last step in allowing us to move forward in completing improvements to our front entrance. Local landscape architect and museum trustee, Gordon Hyatt has donated his time and services and has provided an excellent plan.

Holiday Happenings

Again, this year, the Jamesville Community Museum will conduct our Holiday Quilt Raffle. This raffle has become a tradition at the museum over the years. Previous year's quilts have quickly become family heirlooms. The opportunity to participate in this year's raffle begins with the tickets that are included with this newsletter and will continue until the night of the drawing on December 1st.

For additional tickets, contact us at jamesvillecommunitymuseum@gmail.com

Alpha Monument Rededication Ceremony

My son Haberle and I want to thank everyone involved with the monument rededication that took place on October 13th. The day started a bit wet, but that did not keep us from pushing forward with this historic moment. As the time inched close to one o'clock, the townsfolk and members of Boy Scout Troop 22 gathered. It was beneath a shroud of umbrellas and rain jackets that kept us all close and attentive as the program started. A podium made from a cedar log was the focal point as Marv Bodley welcomed everyone to this little town gathering. Words of history and the passion that a young man has had for an 84 year old monument rang true. Marv got the attention of all as he commanded the audience with his local knowledge. Then came the moment when Haberle Conlon took the stage, confident in his Eagle Scout project, he put forth a speech with honor and vigor. He thanked all who so generously devoted their time and equipment to make his dream possible. The countless hours spent, the approvals, the planning, the execution all could be heard in this young man's quest to captivate his audience. Then the moment of rededication, as Haberle cut a red construction ribbon with his scissors..."I hereby rededicate this monument to the people of Jamesville!" There was applause and fanfare; it was official! Avery Park was home to this testament of worker safety in the once thriving local cement industry. Everyone proceeded into the museum to celebrate the moment with refreshments. Cider and donut holes were eagerly snapped up by young and old alike. An awe inspiring Alpha Cement exhibit was on display put together by none other than our resident historian, Greg Titus. The artifacts that he shared told the whole story of Alpha Portland Cement in Jamesville from paper weights to sacks of cement. All took note and for sure learned something new about this age old industry which shaped our community. Many smiles and handshakes rained down on Haberle as he greeted all with his kind words. It was a very special day for Jamesville, Haberle, and a monument that was all forgotten until a boy scout had a dream. May God bless our little Jamesville and all who have made it their home...we will always be making history! Amen.

On Display at the Museum...

Military collector Bob Good has a new exhibit at the museum, titled: Women Serving in World War II. This exhibit honors the women serving in the military, as well as those who picked up the slack on the home front by working in the factories. Military uniforms and WW II memorabilia are currently on display. Stop in and take a look at Bob Good's collection! We are open Sundays 1-4 pm or anytime by appointment. Call Greg Titus 315-569-9328 for details or to make arrangements to come check it out.
